Grief consumes Evie. She withdraws from her friends and family, and she begins to question everything she once believed in. She feels lost and alone, and she doesn't know how to go on.

One day, Evie meets a group of people who are also struggling with their own personal demons. There's Sarah, a single mother who is trying to rebuild her life after a bad relationship. There's Jake, a recovering addict who is trying to stay clean. And there's Michael, a young man who is struggling with his sexuality.

At first, Evie is hesitant to get involved with this group of people. She's afraid that they will judge her, or that they won't understand her pain. But as she gets to know them, she realizes that they are all kind and compassionate people who are just trying to make sense of their own lives.

Evie begins to open up to the group, and she shares her story of grief and loss. The group listens with compassion and understanding, and they offer their support and friendship.

As Evie spends more time with the group, she begins to heal. She learns to accept her brother's death, and she finds a new sense of purpose in her life. She also finds love, in the form of Michael, who is a kind and supportive partner.
