

The Blackboard Jungle Novel: A Gripping Tale of Education and Urban Life

About the Book

The Blackboard Jungle, published in 1954, is a groundbreaking and controversial novel by Evan Hunter (who later wrote under the pseudonym

Ed McBain). The book tells the story of Richard Dadier, a young English teacher who takes a job at a troubled inner-city school, North Manual High School.

Dadier is immediately confronted with the challenges of teaching in a school where the students are mostly from poor and working-class backgrounds, and many of them are struggling with personal and social problems. He also faces resistance from the school's administration and from some of his colleagues, who are resistant to change.
